WILLIAM UNGER SMALL.

Son of John Jacob Small, hatter and hat-block maker, and Ida Permelia Meeker Small. Descended from Christian Small, reputed to have been born in Metz, Alsace. His son, George Small, married Sarah Cummings of Liverpool, daughter of an English sea captain, whose wife was a Spanish girl from Cadiz, Spain. George Small became an American sailor and was impressed into British service before the war of 1812. He was confined aboard the prison-ship "Dartmoor," where his wife joined him. Their son, John J. Small was born on board the ship. He drew rations as an American prisoner from birth and died in 1893, the last survivor of the war of 1812. He was the grandfather of William Unger Small. His wife was of Colonial Dutch and English descent and her grandfather was Colonel Thiers of Tours, France, who was aide-de-camp to Lafayette and fought through the Revolution. Maternal ancestry is pure English and Welsh. The Meeker homestead at Lyons Farms, N. J., is still standing, a relic of the seventeenth century. Born on January 7, 1876, Newark, N. J. Lived in Newark, N. J., before entering college. Prepared for college at Newark High School. Entered Rutgers in 1892 with the class of '96. From September, 1897, to September,

1898, everywhere west of Chicago, south of British Colombia, and north of Mexico City. Left Newark for Klondike in September, 1897. Got as far as the Columbia River, State of Washington. Was a "hobo" during this period. Lived everywhere in the states west of the Mississippi. Beat way, riding the brake-beam and blind-baggage, over about 20,000 miles of American and Mexican railroads. During the period never had more than $5 or $10 in pocket. From September, 1898, to November, 1900, was in Guadalajara, Mexico, and nearby towns. Taught English in private classes for first eight months; engaged in a partnership enterprise with the Hardman Rubber Company, of Belleville, N. J., for sixteen months, during which time traveled along the west coast of Mexico in the states of Jalisco and Tepic, making contracts with the owners of forest lands for the export to New York of wild, crude rubber. From November, 1900, to February, 1903, was in Brazil in pursuit of wild rubber for the Hardman Rubber Company; made two voyages to the Amazon Valley, exploring many of its tributaries, camped out with wild men, fought fevers and mosquitoes; April, 1902, established at Port Alonzo, an incipient town which he helped to build on the imaginary boundary line between Brazil and Bolivia, where he built up a flourishing trading business, but the revolution of Placido de Castro (called the Acre Rubber War) broke this up; went through the horrors of the starving out of Port Alonzo during the last months of 1902; was among the 180 Bolivian troops in the trenches who defended this last stronghold when attacked during the eight day and night assaults delivered by the insurgents; surrendered on January 18, 1903, and with six other non-Bolivian prisoners was condemned to be shot, but later pardoned, and reached New York in February, 1903. May, 1903, to May, 1906, was an epoch of disappointments, during which time tried to collect $15,000 which the governments of Brazil and Bolivia owed him for losses suffered in the Acre territory from which he had been expelled; residences during this period, La Paz, Bolivia; Rio Janeiro, Brazil; Valparaiso, Chili; cost of collection balanced the collections; during this period engaged in three desultory enterprises—a mining venture in copper in southern Peru—drove a herd of cattle from northern Argentina to the cattle markets of western Bolivia—engaged in a scheme for the acquisition of titles to nitrate-lands in northern Chili; reached New York, May, 1906. From May, 1906, to May, 1907, tried to find work in New York with anybody doing business in Latin-American countries. May, 1907, to September, 1913, made connections with The Davies & Lawrence Co., manufacturing chemists, of New York; for six years traveled over every district in southern Mexico, Central America, Venezuela, the West Indies, the Guianas, and parts of Colombia; made a complete change of front on entering this firm's employ and began slowly to climb up the "golden stairs"; returned to New York five times during the period. September, 1913, to date, ended connection with The Davies & Lawrence

Co.; left New York in May, 1914, representing a group of American manufacturers as salesman in South and Central America; made good; still a salesman, but devoting most of time to historical research in all the lands conquered by the Spaniards and Portuguese; when finished with present trip, to Quito, Ecuador, about August, 1917, will settle down in the United States, and try to put into shape a chronological history of the building up of Spain's and Portugal's overseas empire during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, from data which he has been collecting for two years. Avocation, travel and history. Publications, some newspaper articles in Spanish, which have never been translated. Fluent in the languages, Spanish, Portuguese, Italian, French, German, and to a certain extent in the Quichua (Inca) of Peru, the Guarani of southern Brazil and Paraguay.
